Introduction

This publication is the fourth report from the 2001 Census of Population for Northern Ireland, produced in accordance with the provisions of the Census Act (Northern Ireland) 1969. It contains a set of 72 tables providing statistics on the remaining Census topics including; migration of persons and households in and out of Northern Ireland, the method of travel and distance travelled by employed persons to work and the characteristics of those persons with Northern Ireland as a workplace. A more detailed description of the table populations is available at Annex A. The information presented in the report is for Northern Ireland and similar tables will be available electronically down to Local Government District, Electoral Ward and Census Output Area levels on the NISRA website www.nisra.gov.uk (see Annex B for more details).

As with all Census outputs, this report was made possible by the co-operation of members of the public in responding to the Census; the commitment of the Census field staff in delivering and collecting forms; and the assistance of many other people and organisations throughout all aspects of the Census. The Registrar General would like to thank all those who have contributed to this work.

Background to the 2001 Census

Legislation

The Census Act (Northern Ireland) 1969 allows for the carrying out of a Census no less than five years after the previous Census. However various other legislative requirements need to be fulfilled before a Census can be held. The first stage in this process was the publication of The White Paper 'The 2001 Census of Population' which set out the reasons for holding a Census, the proposed questions, operational methodology and format of results. The White Paper was produced in March 1999, two years before the Census, to ensure sufficient time for public discussion of proposals. Prior to every Census, a Census Order is required, which states the date of the Census, the people who are required to complete the form, those who are to be included on the form and the topics on which questions will be asked. The operational aspects of the Census also require legislative approval. This information was set out in the Census Regulations, which contained details of how the Census was to be conducted and included a copy of the Census form.

Fieldwork

The Census was designed to collect information on the resident population on Census Day - 29 April 2001. Ahead of this day enumerators delivered Census forms to every identified household space and communal establishment. Residents were asked to complete the forms with their information, as correct on Census Day, and to return the completed forms by post. Where Census Office did not receive a form through the post, the enumerator visited the address in order to collect the form by hand. Special arrangements were made to enumerate the Armed Forces and people sleeping rough.

Processing

Returned forms were fed through scanning machinery which captured all the ticked responses and stored written answers in digital form. The latter were coded into categories either by automatic systems which recognise terms given in response to questions, or by manual coding. These data then underwent an edit process to ensure that the data were consistent, and an imputation process to supply responses for questions which had not been completed on the original form.

Coverage of the population

While the vast majority of results from the 2001 Census relate to the usually resident population of Northern Ireland on Census Day (29 April 2001), the population coverage of many of the statistics presented in this report extends beyond the usually resident population of Northern Ireland. For example, the Migration tables include people identified in the Censuses in Great Britain as having lived in Northern Ireland one year prior to Census Day, while the Workplace Population tables include people resident in Great Britain (on Census Day) but whose usual place of work is in Northern Ireland. This is described in more detail in Annex A. As with the resident population of Northern Ireland, information from Censuses in Great Britain has been adjusted for underenumeration.

Students are recorded at their term-time address. In contrast to the 1991 Census, information on visitors has not been collected. The Census placed a legal obligation on every household in which someone was usually resident on Census Day, and on every person who was a usual resident of a communal establishment, to complete a Census form. As no Census of Population succeeds in collecting information from every resident, a methodology (The One Number Census) was developed to adjust the results to take account of any undercount and thus provide an accurate estimate of the total population and its characteristics. The One Number Census methodology was developed with the assistance of academic experts and was subject to consultation and peer review. The work involved matching the results of the Census enumeration with those of an independent large scale Census Coverage Survey of 10,000 households, conducted shortly after the Census. The response rate in the Census Coverage Survey was 92 per cent. This enabled the number and characteristics of those not enumerated in the Census to be estimated and this information was used to produce Census results, including those not enumerated in the original count. The figures presented here, as with all reports on the 2001 Census, have been adjusted to take account of under-enumeration. Administrative registers and demographic estimates were used to quality assure the final estimates. Further details on the methodology to adjust for under-enumeration can be found at www.nisra.gov.uk.

Comparability with 1991

The Census is designed to provide the most accurate possible picture of the population on the day the Census is taken. Comparisons of the results contained in this report with counts from the 1991 Census will be affected by changes in the Local Government District boundaries, changes in definitions, and adjustment for under-enumeration in the 2001 Census figures. Where comparisons between 1991 and 2001 Census results are required, the effects of the differences noted above can be mitigated by comparing differences between percentages calculated from the respective bases in each Census, rather than measuring the difference between the actual counts at each Census. Users interested in changes in population size are advised to use the mid-year population estimates, which are designed to measure such changes.

Information in this Report

This Report provides Census results for Northern Ireland on Census Day, 29 April 2001. The results are based on the information collected from the Census forms. Copies of the Census forms will be contained in the forthcoming 2001 Census Definitions Volume. All questions included in the 1991 Census were included in the 2001 Census with the exception of questions relating to usual address and whereabouts on Census night, fertility and professional/vocational qualifications and household accommodation questions on water supply and domestic sewage disposal. The answer categories in some questions, such as educational qualifications, were updated, while questions on religion and economic activity have been restructured. There were also new questions on ethnic group, general health, the provision of unpaid care, time since last paid employment, the size of work force at place of work, supervision of employees, lowest floor level of accommodation and whether all rooms in a household were located on a single floor. The Census questions asked of all people covered:

- relationship to others in the household
- sex, age (date of birth) and marital status
- whether schoolchild/student
- term-time address (where applicable)
- Irish language
- religion or religion brought up in
- country of birth
- ethnic group
- general health
- provision of unpaid care
- long term illness
- usual address one year ago whilst questions for those aged 16 to 74 covered:
 - educational qualifications
 - economic activity and employment status
 - number of employees at place of work
 - occupation and industry of employment
 - address of workplace
 - means of travel to work
 - hours worked

In addition, the person filling in the form in each household was asked about:

- type of accommodation and whether selfcontained
- number of rooms
- availability of bath/shower and toilet
- lowest floor level and whether all rooms on one level
- presence of central heating
- availability of cars or vans
- tenure
- landlord

Finding Information in this Report

This report contains 72 tables on three main topics: migration, travel to work and workplace population. While the results in the report are presented at the Northern Ireland level, similar tables are also available electronically for a variety of lower geographical levels. These include Local Government Districts, Parliamentary Constituencies, Health and Social Services Boards, Education and Library Boards and NUTS Level III Areas. Some of the tables are also available for Electoral Wards and Census Output Areas. The tables at these lower geographical levels can be accessed via the Census section of the NISRA web site (www.nisra.gov.uk) or tailored CD-ROMS, which may be purchased from Census Customer Services (see below for address). The availability of each table at the lower geographical level is dependent upon the need to preserve confidentiality and data utility. Annex B outlines the availability of each table at the lower geographical levels and describes the table numbering system.

If the results you require are not within these tables, adhoc queries can be requested by contacting Census Customer Services at:

Census Definitions

Key Census definitions on persons, households and communal establishments are given below, and details on all 2001 Census definitions and classifications can be found in the metadata section of the Census web site www.nisra.gov.uk. This will include a Census glossary together with details on 2001 Census output classifications, differences between parts of the UK, comparability with the 1991 Census, Census concepts and definitions, data classifications, and standard derived variables. A printed Census Definitions volume will be available in mid 2004.

Persons: Results from the 2001 Census of Population relate to the usually resident population; a usual resident is defined as someone who resides at that address most of the time. The usually resident population includes persons temporarily away on Census Day (for example on holiday, on business, in hospital or visiting family), persons who work away from home for part of the time, students at their term-time address, babies born before Census Day even if still in hospital, and persons staying at that address if they have no other usual address.

Households: A household comprises one person living alone, or a group of persons not necessarily related living at the same address with common housekeeping, that is, sharing either a living-room or sitting-room or at least one meal a day.

Communal establishments: A communal establishment is defined as an establishment providing managed residential accommodation, where managed means full-time or part-time supervision of the accommodation. Fuller details of these terms and other Census definitions can be found on the NISRA website at www.nisra.gov.uk.

Quality of the results

The use of the One Number Census methodology means that the results of the 2001 Census cover the entire population of Northern Ireland and are the most reliable achievable. The results are nonetheless subject to potential errors from a variety of sources including incorrect information provided on forms, sampling error relating to estimates derived through the One Number Census process, and errors introduced during processing and imputation. Some elements of incorrect information have been corrected during an edit process and, following this, the results have undergone an extensive quality assurance process including checks against administrative sources. Further information on accuracy, coverage and imputation rates is provided on the NISRA website. A detailed report on the quality of Census results will be published in 2004.

Confidentiality

The Registrar General has taken steps to ensure that the confidentiality of respondents is fully protected. All published results from the Census have been subject to statistical processes to ensure that individuals cannot be identified. One of these processes, small cell adjustment, may result in marginally different results between tables reporting the same statistic, however any differences between the figures will be very small. An example of this is seen in table S376 of this report where the population differs slightly from other tables. A description of the small cell adjustment process is available on the NISRA website at www.nisra.gov.uk.
